Governing Generation I

Everyone is talking about the Internet and its potential to change the way we work, learn, live and govern.

Government officials are in a unique position to turn this talk into action, transforming the promise of the Internet into practical benefits and realities for its citizens.

So where does Microsoft fit in?

Microsoft is working with governments everywhere to create digital democracies - where citizens can do business with government readily, talk to politicians and the civil service easily, and get better information and services fast.

Microsoft's goal is straightforward: We are here to help governments, at all levels and of all sizes, move processes online, become more responsive to citizens and have better connections with suppliers and partners. Through Microsoft GovTalk™, we are also enabling governments to speak the language of business.

It is what we call e-government. Helping everyone do business with government any time, any place and on any device..

Microsoft is already providing real-life e-government solutions today.
